Ms. TENNEY. Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a new record in Oswego County, New York. The town of Redfield now has the record for the most snowfall in 48 hours. An astonishing 62 inches of snow fell in this idyllic town along the Salmon River with only 550 people near Lake Ontario.

While subzero temperatures and blizzard conditions keep most people inside our homes, National Weather Service meteorologist Carolyn Yerdon bravely announced the record breaking news standing atop a 5-foot snow bank. The total snowfall breaks the world record of 57 inches in a 48-hour period set in 2009 by Bennetts Bridge in Oswego County.

Home to some of the harshest winter conditions in the country, upstate New York experiences heavy lake-effect snow, high winds, and bitter temperatures all season long.

As snow blankets our region this winter, we are grateful to our first responders, who continue to go above and beyond and keep our roadsides safe, to protect and rescue some stranded vulnerable citizens—yes, in 5 feet of snow, you can lose people—and providing assistance to all our communities.

A special thank you to Carolyn Yerdon, our special National Weather Service employee. May I just say her favorite words: Let it snow, let it snow, let it snow.

HEALTH INSURANCE FOR AMERICANS WORKING FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

(Mr. LAMALFA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LaMALFA. Mr. Speaker, today there is an estimated 11 million Americans working for small businesses who lack employer-sponsored health insurance.

The reality is that families across the country are struggling to afford coverage; they are priced out of plans high, winds, and bitter temperatures all season long. It is not a complete fix for our current political climate and what is at stake. The first quote is: “We may have come over the world knowledge that he had started at the age of 16 in his matriculation through college and his embarkation on the world knowledge that he had. The second quote is: “Of all forms of inequality, injustice in healthcare is the most shocking and inhumane.” Dr. Martin Luther King.

When we think about this great Nation and our leaders before us like Dr. King, who came together to lay a framework for equal pay, fair wages, healthcare, equality in housing, so much more we are reminded of what is at stake and how much we have to lose in this current political climate. We have a lot to lose under the current administration’s destructive policies. Dr. King would be greatly disappointed at many things going on in this country right now that affects all of our communities.

We need to conduct this as a large teach-in. That is what this should be. This should be a teach-in so we can show what Dr. King was about and the importance.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. RICHMOND), the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Mr. RICHMOND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania, Congressman DWIGHT EVANS, for allowing me this opportunity to speak. Mr. Speaker, I heard Mr. EVANS talk about the King movement. King’s route to influence in Pennsylvania. I just want to note, and this would only be a small moment of the week that Dr. King was about and the importance.

Dr. King was not only a great man but a great patriot, who loved America and the ideas of the underpinning of our democracy. To kick off our discussion, I want to open up with two Dr. King comments that really capture our current political climate and what is at stake. The first quote is: “We may have come over the world knowledge that he had started at the age of 16 in his matriculation through college and his embarkation on the world knowledge that he had. The second quote is: “Of all forms of inequality, injustice in healthcare is the most shocking and inhumane.” Dr. Martin Luther King.

When we think about this great Nation and our leaders before us like Dr. King, who came together to lay a framework for equal pay, fair wages, healthcare, equality in housing, so much more we are reminded of what is at stake and how much we have to lose in this current political climate. We have a lot to lose under the current administration’s destructive policies.
So we have to, in the spirit of Dr. King, remember that we are the greatest country on Earth; and if we don’t think it is a perfect Union, we have to make it a more perfect Union. Even if it costs us our life, like it did Dr. King, and it cost him his life in Memphis, fighting for sanitation workers; we have to fight for the least among us because this country is only as great as is the least among us.

As long as there are people sleeping on the streets during this blizzard, that country is failing. When there are kids in public school that are destined for failure because we have not funded our public schools, this country is failing.

So I would just say that, of all of the great things about Dr. King, the one thing that we should remember is his sacrifice, his courage, and the fact that he gave his life to make our lives a better life.

Let me just say that, as I grew up going to some of the best schools in the country, integrated schools because of Dr. King and because of the person whom I am going to introduce, I know I stand on their backs, and I know that I have a lot of work to do to make sure that the generation behind me has that ability.

But sacrifice is not easy, and when I think of it, I think of people that I read about in my textbooks, people I studied, people I admired, people whose autobiography I get to read every morning. I actually get to call this gentleman, this distinguished gentleman from Georgia, a friend.

But he is more than a friend: he is an icon; he is a trailblazer; he is a person who saved this country; and he, as a teenager, started his civil rights fight. He marched across the Edmund Pettus Bridge, knowing that there was hatred on the other side; and he met hatred with love, and he was beaten because he loved and he hated.

But do you know what he did? He marched again. Do you know what he did? He ran for Congress.

Do you know what he did? He welcomed me into this Congress, and he paved a better way for generations so that we could go to some of the best schools in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I have an opportunity to present, introduce, one of the greatest Americans to ever walk on the face of this Earth, one who has sacrificed blood, sweat, tears, and who has stayed on his knees constantly, praying for a better country.

He reminds us all that the Lord will order your steps, but you have to move forward. He moved his feet across that Edmund Pettus Bridge, and he was beaten so that I could vote without counting how many bubbles in a bar of soap or how many jellybeans in a big tub.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. EVANS) will now yield to one of the greatest Americans and the greatest Member serving in this House of Representatives, the Honorable JOHN LEWIS from Georgia.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank our chairman, and that is why he is our chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, because you just heard him so eloquently express his thoughts and his feelings. He has done a fantastic job as the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, and I thank him. I always recognize the importance of what he and I stand for.

The gentleman is correct about the next person. I want to add my voice to what he just said. I was 11 years old when he went across the Edmund Pettus Bridge. I recall seeing it on CBS. I did not understand it, but, now, like the chairman, I serve in this body with him. I am a part of this body. And as I watch him and as I listen to him, all of the drive and the energy that he has and he is always extremely positive. I have not met a person who is more positive and optimistic about the future of this country as he says and talks about walking in his shoes. I remember that he said that.

I remember that I was in high school when I was down in Alabama on that Edmund Pettus Bridge—all with him and my good friend and colleague from Alabama, TERRI SEWELL—that I thought to myself, I said: “Self, here I am with Congressman Lewis.” He is someone who is renowned in this body and in this country and around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend, Mr. EVANS, for yielding, and thank you to the chairman of the CBC, CEDRIC RICHMOND.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that you grew up in rural Alabama, 50 miles from Montgomery, outside of a little place called Troy. It is true that my father was a sharecropper, a tenant farmer.

But in 1944, when I was 4 years old—and I do remember when I was 4—my father had sold him 110 acres of land. We picked cotton. We gathered peanuts. We pulled corn.

Sometimes I would be out there working in the field and I would fall behind, and my mother would say: “Boy, you need to catch up.”

I would say: “This is hard work.”

And she would say: “Hard work never killed anybody.”

I’d say: “Well, it’s about to kill me.”

But one day, 15 years old, in the 10th grade, I heard of Martin Luther King, Jr. I heard of Rosa Parks in 1955. The action of Rosa Parks, the words and leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. made me decide to get in the way. So 2 years later, I wrote a letter to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in 1957, and I told him, in this little letter, that I wanted to attend a State-supported college called Troy State, now known as Troy University. It didn’t admit Black students.

Dr. King wrote me back and sent me a round-trip Greyhound bus ticket and invited me to come to Montgomery to meet with him. In the meantime, I had been accepted at a little college in Nashville, Tennessee, American Baptist College.

Dr. King got back in touch with me and said, "More than anything, you are home for spring break, come and see me."

So, in 1958, I boarded a Greyhound bus and traveled from Troy to Montgomery, and a young lawyer by the name of Fred Gray, who had been a lawyer for Rosa Parks and for Dr. King, met me at the First Baptist Church, pastored by the Reverend Ralph Abernathy, and took me in to see Dr. King and Reverend Ralph Abernathy.

Martin Luther King, Jr., said: "Are you the boy from Troy? Are you John Lewis?"

I said: "Dr. King, I am John Robert Lewis," but he still called me "the boy from Troy."

This man inspired me to stand up, to find a way to get to the way or find a way to get in trouble, in good trouble, necessary trouble.

He said: "If you want to go to Troy State, we will help you, but we may need to file a suit against the State of Alabama, against Troy State. Go back and have a discussion with your mother and your father. Tell them their home may be bombed or burned. They can lose their land."

I went back. My mother was so afraid and my father was afraid, so I continued to study in Nashville. From time to time, Dr. King would come and visit Nashville and speak at mass meetings and rallies. But he inspired me, along with Rosa Parks and others, to get involved.

He led the Montgomery bus boycott. For more than 381 days, people walked the streets; they shared cars and rides; they stood in unmovable lines; but they never gave up.

Dr. King inspired us to stand up. He inspired us to believe in the philosophy and the discipline of nonviolence. We would be sitting at a lunch counter waiting to be served, and someone would come up and spit on us or put a lighted cigarette down our backs or in our hair, pour hot water or hot coffee on us, but we obeyed his instructions.

So I got arrested a few times during the sixties, 45 times, but I never gave up.

Just think, in 1961, the same year that President Barack Obama was born, Black people and White people couldn't leave the city sitting together to travel on a Greyhound bus or a Trailways bus through the South.

People were arrested, jailed, beaten, but Dr. King met us in Montgomery, sheltered us in a church. One night, while we were there in that church, when people were threatening to bomb the church or burn it down, he made a call to Robert Kennedy and told him about what was happening. Robert Kennedy connected him to his brother, President Kennedy, and the President put the city of Montgomery under martial law.

If it hadn't been for Martin Luther King, Jr., Robert Kennedy, and President Kennedy, some of us would have died in that church. But it led to the desegregation of public transportation all across the American South.

"More than anything, you are home for spring break, come and see me."

Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?
younger person to be part of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. It will be my greatest honor to have been able to work for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, to walk in that office on Auburn, that I believe may be the home of Ralph David Abernathy because it was after the death of Dr. King, to know James Orange, and to know the brother that walked with the wooden leg, and to know Andy in a way that they were still engaged in Dr. King’s work.

I am saddened of the message that he has given to us. And as Chairman Richmond said, he was young, and he asked the question: “Life’s most persistent and nagging question is”—he said:—what are you doing for others?” And I think we as members of the Congressional Black Caucus and the adjunct of the foundation that works for young people, we have no doubt in what we are doing for others.

But Dr. King gave us the words: “I would like to say in my youth”—as he talked about his death on February 4, 1968, this is what we should be doing in 2018. We should be talking about what we are doing in commemoration. “I would like somebody to mention on that day”—that day Martin Luther King, Jr.—that I did try in my life . . . to love and serve humanity.”

So I close, I want to remind those of us who have not yet made our journey to something that brought us closer to Dr. King that this body, this group of Republicans and Democrats, this administration, we need to unshackle ourselves. This question of race needs to be thrown under the bus of the beloved community. And we need to be able to dream like Dr. King did and say—but he learned to use his imagination when he saw this separation of his mind beyond the reality of his segregated experiences of blatant discrimination, and the discriminatory abuse inflicted on himself, his family, and his people.

Dr. King took this courage to his death, for at the end of his life, he was not ashamed to go to Riverside Church and stand against the Vietnam war while others looked aghast, afraid. Why are you stepping out of your box? Dr. King said: I believe in the beloved community, a dreamer with works and actions.

And so I close in that faithful journey that he made that we will be commemorating all converging in Memphis, Tennessee, and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees who were forged and born in the shadow of two sanitation workers who were killed in the line of their duty, and Dr. King felt compelled to be there.

When do we feel compelled: on the tax bill, on CHIP, on fully qualified healthcare, on affirmative action? When are we taking this, in essence, to the mat? Because that is what Dr. King did. He took it to the mat. And he went to the face of violence, and he said to us, in his last words, that he had been to the mountaintop. And he did not know if he would get there someday. But he knew that we as a people would pine away to that pathway. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, next Monday, January 15, the nation observes for the 33rd time the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Holiday. Each year on that day we observe: a country divided, a special right of Americans to celebrate the life and legacy of a man who brought hope and healing to America. Dr. King’s work.

The Martin Luther King Holiday reminds us that nothing is impossible when we are guided by the better angels of our nature. Dr. King's mission was to fill a great void in our nation, and answered our collective longing to become a country that truly lived by its noblest principles.

Yet, Dr. King knew that it was not enough just to talk the talk; he knew that he had to walk the walk for his words to be credible. And so we commemorate on this holiday the man of action, who put his life on the line for freedom and justice every day. We honor the courage of a man who endured harassment, threats and beatings, and even bombings.

We commemorate the man who went to jail 29 times to achieve freedom for others, and who knew he would pay the ultimate price for his leadership, but kept on marching and protesting and organizing anyway. Dr. King’s words: “I have întended to decide whether we will walk in the light of creative altruism or the darkness of destructive selfishness. ’Life’s most persistent and nagging question,’ he said, is what are you doing for others? And when Dr. King talked about the end of his mortal life in one of his last sermons, on February 4, 1968 in the pulpit of Ebenezer Baptist Church, even then he lifted up the value of service as the hallmark of a full life: ‘I'd like somebody to mention on that day Martin Luther King, Jr. tried to give his life serving others,’ he said. ‘I want you to say on that day—that I might have lost my life—’ that I did try in my life . . . to love and serve humanity.”

I'd like somebody to mention on that day, that I did try in my life . . . to love and serve humanity.

In the Declaration of Independence and to have a place in this nation’s Bill of Rights. We commemorate the man who went to jail 29 times to achieve freedom for others, and who knew he would pay the ultimate price for his leadership, but kept on marching and protesting and organizing anyway. Dr. King’s words: “I have întended to decide whether we will walk in the light of creative altruism or the darkness of destructive selfishness. ’Life’s most persistent and nagging question,’ he said, is what are you doing for others? And when Dr. King talked about the end of his mortal life in one of his last sermons, on February 4, 1968 in the pulpit of Ebenezer Baptist Church, even then he lifted up the value of service as the hallmark of a full life: ‘I'd like somebody to mention on that day Martin Luther King, Jr. tried to give his life serving others,’ he said. ‘I want you to say on that day—that I did try in my life . . . to love and serve humanity.”

We should also remember that the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was, above all, a person who was always willing to speak truth to power.

There is perhaps no better example of Dr. King’s moral integrity and consistency than his criticism of the Vietnam War being waged by the Johnson Administration, an administration that was otherwise a friend and champion of civil and human rights.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was born in Atlanta, Georgia on January 15, 1929.

Martin’s youth was spent in our country’s Deep South, then run by Jim Crow and the Ku Klux Klan.

For young African-Americans, it was an environment even more dangerous than the one they face today.

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. that we celebrate here today could have turned out to be just another African-American who would have had to learn to be happy with what he had, and what he was allowed.

But he learned to use his imagination and his dreams—to see right through those “White Only” signs—to see the reality that all men, women, regardless of their place of origin, their gender, or their creed, are created equal. Through his studies, Dr. King learned that training his mind and broadening his intellectual vision shielded him from the demoralizing effects of segregation and discrimination.

Dr. King was a dreamer and his dreams were a tool through which he was able to lift his mind beyond the reality of his segregated society, and into a realm where it was possible that white and black, red and brown, and all others live and work alongside each other and prosper.

But the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was not an idle daydreamer. He shared his visions through speeches that motivated others to join in his nonviolent effort to lift themselves from poverty and isolation by creating a new America where equal justice and institutions were facts of life.

In the Declaration of Independence in 1776, Thomas Jefferson wrote: “We hold these truths to be self evident, that all Men are Created Equal.” At that time and for centuries to come, African-Americans were historically, culturally, and legally excluded from inclusion in that declaration.

Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King’s “I Have a Dream” Speech, delivered 54 years ago, on August 28, 1963, was a clarion call to each citizen of this great nation that we still hear today.

His request was simply and eloquently conveyed—he asked America to allow its citizens to live out the words written in its Declaration of Independence and to have a place in this nation’s Bill of Rights.

The 1960s were a time of great crisis and conflict.

The dreams of the people of this country were filled with troubling images that arose like lava from the nightmares of violence and the crises they had to face, both domestically and internationally.

It was the decade of the Cuban Missile Crisis, the Vietnam War, and the assassinations of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy, Malcolm X, Presidential Candidate Robert Kennedy, and the man we honor here today.

Dr. Martin Luther King’s dream helped us turn the corner on civil rights.

It started when Dr. King led the Montgomery Bus Boycott, with 4, Rosa Parks and others, which lasted for 381 days, and ended when the United States Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation on all public transportation. But the dream did not die there. It continued started with a peaceful march for suffrage that started in Selma, Alabama on March 7, 1965—a march that ended with violence by the hands of law enforcement officers as the marchers crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge.

Dr. King used several nonviolent tactics to protest against Jim Crow Laws in the South and he organized and led demonstrations for desegregation and voting rights. On April 4, 1967, at Riverside Church in New York City, he spoke out against the Vietnam War, when he saw the devastation that his nation was causing abroad and the effect that it had on the American men and women sent overseas.

When the life of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King was stolen from us, he was a very young 39 years old.

People remember that Dr. King died in Memphis, but few can remember why he was there.

On that fateful day in 1968 Dr. King came to Memphis to support a strike by the city’s sanitation workers.

The garbage men there had recently formed a chapter of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees to demand better wages and working conditions.

But the city refused to recognize their union, and when the 1,300 employees walked off their jobs the police broke up the rally with mace and Billy clubs.

It was then that union leaders invited Dr. King to Memphis.

Despite the danger he might face entering such a volatile situation, it was an invitation he could not refuse.

Not because he longed for danger, but because the labor movement was intertwined with the civil rights movement for which he had given up so many years of his life.

The death of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., will never overshadow his life.

That is his legacy as a dreamer and a man of action.

It is a legacy of hope, tempered with peace. It is a legacy not quite yet fulfilled.

I hope that Dr. King’s vision of equality under the law is never lost to us, who in the present, toil in times of unevenness in our equality.

For without that vision—without that dream—we can never continue to improve on the human condition.

For those who have already forgotten, or whose vision is already clouded with the fog of complacency, I would like to recite the immortal words of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,

I have a dream that one day on down in Alabama with its vicious racists, with its Governor having his lips dripping with words of interposition and nullification—one day these hills and these black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls as sisters and brothers.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, every hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plain and the crooked places will be made straight, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

Dr. King’s dream did not stop at racial equality, his ultimate dream was one of human equality and dignity.

There is no doubt that Dr. King wished and worked for freedom and justice for every individual in America.

He was in midst of planning the 1968 Poor People’s Campaign for Jobs and Justice when he struck down by the dark deed of an assassin on April 4, 1968.

It is for us, then, to continue that fight today and forever, in the great spirit that inspired the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the next person I would like to yield to, my colleague from Texas gave a great lead-in for her, from the great State of California, as Dr. King stood up against the Vietnam war. She knows a little bit about standing up.

If you know anything about Honorable BARBARA LEE from the 13th Congressional District, you would know she doesn’t mind being by herself.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from the great State of California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I thank Congressman EVANS for yielding, for that gracious introduction, but, more importantly, for his magnificent leadership. He has come to Congress hitting the ground running, and it truly has been and is in the spirit of Dr. King, so I thank the gentleman very much.

And to our chair, Congressman CEDRIC RICHMOND, I want to thank him for his stellar leadership—and it is steady—of our caucus in helping us to stay focused on this Special Order on the evenings which we do these to honor the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who was and is our drum major for justice.

To Congressman JOHN LEWIS, I just have to say to him that I owe him a debt of gratitude. I would not be here if it were not for him.

And I want to say, on behalf of my young people and the Martin Luther King Jr. Freedom Center who have a chance to be with him every year—now it has been about 17 years—how much he and Congresswoman TERI SEWELL—how much they have touched the lives of others that live around, and how they understand now what fighting for justice and peace really means by being part of their efforts and by their mentoring them and teaching them that the beloved community can really be real. So I thank Congressman Lewis so much. It is an honor to know the gentleman and to serve with him.

This year, as we remember the man in the movement that transformed the soul of America, it is really important that we honor the fullness of Dr. King’s dream. So while we remember Dr. King’s birthday this month, we also are reminded that it was 50 years ago today, on April 4, 1968, he lost his life to an assassin’s bullet.

Dr. King was a crusader for voting rights and peace, but he was also a warrior for economic justice and ending poverty. In fact, one of Dr. King’s most memorable speeches, of course, “I’ve Been to the Mountaintop,” it was given in Memphis, Tennessee, at a time when Dr. King was determined to transform the civil rights movement into an intersectional economic justice revolution.

A few months before his death, two young African-American workers were crushed to death by a faulty truck in Memphis. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, A.F.S.C.M.E., went on strike, and Dr. King was right there with them lending his support.

In a speech to the sanitation workers on strike, Dr. King explained why he was there. He said: “Now, our struggle is for genuine equality, which means economic equality.” Dr. King said that to thousands gathered at Mason Temple. He said: “For we know that it isn’t enough to integrate lunch counters. What does it profit a man to be able to eat at an integrated lunch counter if he doesn’t earn enough money to buy a hamburger . . .?”

Dr. King had come to signal the dawn of a new era in the struggle. He was there to stand with workers who were sick and tired of low wages, unsafe working conditions, and the city’s refusal to recognize their union. He was there because he believed that labor rights, civil rights, and human rights are one and the same. He was there because he understood the simple truth that there can be no racial justice without economic justice.

Tragically, while fighting to secure the American Dream for all Americans, Dr. King was assassinated on April 4, 1968. Now, that was a day that changed my life. Congresswoman JACKSON LEE mentioned where she was. We all remember that moment. I was living in San Jose, California, and was commuting to San Francisco, about an hour away by train. I returned that evening. My car was parked in the train’s parking lot. I got off the train, turned on the radio, and the news came through that Dr. King had been killed.

Well, I sat in my car for I don’t know how long, and I cried. I was shocked like everyone, saddened, and angry. But I was also motivated to fight for the dream that Dr. King envisioned. My job, I quit my job. At that moment, I knew that I had to do something. So I became involved as a community worker with Bobby Seale and the Black Panther Party. But it was Dr. King’s assassination that catapulted me into the movement.

I have a dream today.
I was determined to prove that even though the assassin killed the dreamer, he could not kill the dream. Right now in this country, the work that Dr. King went to Memphis to achieve, that work remains unfinished, which is what we intend to complete. Forty-seven million American households are locked in poverty. Discrimination and institutional racism continue to hold livable wages hostage, and the economic wealth divide, it grows deeper every day in urban and rural communities.

Now, I represent the 13th Congressional District of California, a great district where there is an explosion of wealth in the bay area, which has recently experienced a spike in median household income.

It is a hub of innovation and creativity, yet, in many ways, it is a tale of two cities. Black households in my district have been locked out of this explosion of wealth. According to the Census Bureau, the median income in the bay area jumped by 9 percent while the median income for Black households inched up just 2 percent.

It is wealth inequality. Twenty-three percent of Black households are poor, and 43 percent of Black children in my district are considered poor in Oakland. These numbers have remained stagnant year after year after year. This is unacceptable.

It is not just my district that experiences this wealth divide. Recent studies show that if trends persist, median Black household wealth could hit zero by 2053.

This alarming possibility makes one thing clear: the work to achieve Dr. King’s dream must continue, and members of the Congressional Black Caucus tirelessly continue to work both inside this Congress and in our communities because there is still much that we must overcome.

As the conscience of the Congress, the Congressional Black Caucus fights every day to dismantle barriers that prevent low-income people, poor people, and people of color from having a fair shot at the American Dream. Dr. King’s legacy can be found in our efforts to give communities of color, struggling families, and women a fair shot at improving their basic living standards.

There are many bills: Congressman BOBBY SCOTT’s bill to raise the minimum wage to $15 an hour, and Congresswoman ALMA ADAMS’ Closing the Meal Gap Act. There are many bills that many members of the Congressional Black Caucus really are championing every single day to ensure that Dr. King’s life will be remembered, that his death will not overshadow his life, and that his legacy of fighting, as Dr. King said, to make the promises of democracy real will live on for generations.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Alabama (Ms. SEWELL). I just had the pleasure of really meeting her this year. She has a lot of energy and a lot of drive. She got me to go to Alabama, and I had never been to Alabama before. But after her personality, her drive, and her intellectual curiosity, and between her and James, God bless them, and the beautiful Ms. SEWELL of Alabama, Mr. Speaker, I thank Congressman EVANS for yielding. He has so ably represented and led the Second District of Pennsylvania. It has been an honor to call the gentleman my colleague.

Now, I want to say to my colleague, that today I join with my CBC colleagues in honoring the extraordinary life and legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., 50 years after his tragic death. Today we honor and celebrate the man who led our country in the fight against racism and injustice, a man who forged tools of nonviolence and compassion so that our Nation could break the chains of segregation and Jim Crow. Today we honor a man who refused to believe that racism would one day end our future, and who fought to ensure that truth and love would be the final word.

As the United States Representative of Alabama’s historic civil rights district, I know that Dr. King’s selfless sacrifices and contributions to our Nation’s history and changed the lives of so many families in my district and around the world.

When Birmingham was one of the most segregated cities in America, it was Dr. King who brought the civil rights movement home to Alabama during the Birmingham campaign. When four little Black girls were killed in the bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, it was Dr. King who delivered their eulogy and who refused to let their deaths go unnoticed.

Mr. Speaker, when the police beat marchers on a bridge in my hometown in Alabama who were simply marching for the right to vote, it was Dr. King who helped Dr. Reese and so many others to organize that march from Selma to Montgomery.

It was foot soldiers like the honorable JOHN LEWIS, whom I am honored every day to be able to call colleague, who sacrificed their lives for the opportunity of a next generation to have the dream that so many wanted and fought for.

There are constituents in my district, the civil rights foot soldiers, who marched with Dr. King, who answered the call to fight for justice. These foot soldiers faced fire hoses, police dogs, and nightsticks so that future generations of Americans could now have the equal right to vote.

Mr. Speaker, I get to cross the Edmund Pettus Bridge just to go home to see my folks and to visit my family in Selma, Alabama, to go to my hometown to visit my friends who live in a place that still needs help.

There is still some unfinished business of civil rights and voting rights. It is my great honor to invite year after year so many to come—thousands—walk in the footsteps of JOHN LEWIS with JOHN LEWIS. It doesn’t get any better than that.

For me to be able to see that I am the Member from Alabama, I know that his death will not overshadow his life, and that I must do the hard work and the unfinished business that is civil rights and voting rights in America. As long as there is voter suppression and there are people are not allowed to vote in this country, we have work to do. We have lots of work to do.

We must do our own work. It is not enough to just say thank you. It is not enough that we come before every year to reenact the march from Selma to Montgomery. It is not just about reenactment. It is about what we do day in and day out to further the dream that is Dr. King’s to build that beloved community that we talked about.

We must get as close as JOHN LEWIS and know that he is not just talking the talk. He walks the walk every day. There are times when I am purely frustrated in this House, frustrated because there is so much work that we must do, and so much work that we don’t do because of our dysfunction. When I get tired, I just look over at JOHN LEWIS, and I think to myself: this man never was tired.

The hard work was done by so many before us, and those of us who get to walk these Halls of Congress have to decide what we are going to do to help further that dream. Dr. King’s life was not in vain. JOHN LEWIS’ work is not in vain.

There are so many of us who know that we stand on the gentleman’s shoulders and know that, in order for this country to live up to its ideals of justice and democracy for all, we must—every generation must—continue that fight.

It was Dr. King who wrote a letter from a Birmingham jail that talked about injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. And there are injustices everywhere. So we have work to do. We, the members of the CBC, take that challenge very seriously. But we Members of Congress of this House, this august body, must take that work seriously, too. That work is not work that is Republican work versus Democratic work. It is America’s work. It is the work of our country.

It is the work that we must do that our constituents sent us here to do that so often is stifled by our rhetoric, stifled by our inability to see beyond our party, and stifled by so many things. But I know for a fact that when we work hand in hand together, Republicans and Democrats, Blacks and Whites, those from different religions, that we can do amazing things. We know that because of the life and legacy of Dr. King.

So on this 50th anniversary of his death, let us not mourn. Let us recommit. Let us recommit to that.
which he stood for, for that which John Lewis stands for, and that is justice for all, irrespective of what country they come from.

We are tried and tested every day, and it is important that we remember that we can all walk across that Edmund Pettus Bridge by doing the hard work of seeking justice and equality for all people just because they are people.

I honor again the great work of Dr. Martin Luther King.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has approximately 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE). Congressman Donald Payne is a neighbor across the Walt Whitman Bridge. And I can attest that to whom much is given, much is expected.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has come to this body and has made an impact in his first year on the floor of Congress. We are delighted to have had him join the CBC.

Mr. Speaker, as I sat here and listened to my colleagues, the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, Cedric Richmond, not the eldest member of the CBC, but a young man who has demonstrated the leadership to be the head of this august body; and to hear my colleague—and I use the term in reverence—John Lewis, I am fortunate to be able to serve the 10th Congressional District of the State of New Jersey at this time. Because, you see, I was sitting here as I listened to Barbara Lee, Sheila Jackson Lee, John Lewis, Terri Sewell, and Mr. Evans, that to whom much is given, much is expected.

I hear the story of the “Boy From Troy.” I hear the story of my chairman, Cedric Richmond. But I have been fortunate in my life because, you see, I had a father who felt that the most important thing to do was to serve this country and this world. He instilled that in me. A lot of his teachings come from Dr. Martin Luther King.

Fifty years after his death, Dr. King’s legacy has been shouted in my home—people who prefer being comfortable to being real. Mr. Speaker, at this time, as young people back in my district say, I am going to keep it real. His personal truths have been twisted into lies by people who want to appear woke but whose eyes are blind to the harsh reality of injustice.

This year, in 2018, we must reclaim Dr. King’s legacy for those who are apt to quote “I Have a Dream” as they seek to silence people of color for fighting to preserve that dream.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. King understood that nonviolence does not mean nonconfrontational. He knew that social change requires sacrifice. He knew that doing what is right does not mean doing what is always easy.

When Black Lives Matter protesters peacefully protest in the streets to protest police violence, conservatics shout that they are inciters of violence and should be replaced. That is not what Dr. King said. Dr. King was not in Birmingham to make everyone comfortable. He was there to upset the status quo and to change our democracy.

Then 55 years ago, Dr. King proclaimed that the Vietnam war was morally unjust. He pointed out that profit had become more important to the government than people who were sacrificing their lives overseas. Conservatives, once again, attacked Dr. King. They said he was being slanderous and that he was tragically misleading people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you see the great outcry and support that we have for our soldiers and our military people now in this country. We honor and revere them now. That came out of the struggle of the Vietnam war, where they were spat on and told that they weren’t worth anything. That is where it came from, Dr. King bringing up the unjust war that this was. So out of Dr. King’s protests against the Vietnam war, we began a great reverence for our soldiers once again.

That is what we see now in the streets when we see a Vietnam vet and we tell them: Thank you for your service. Or whether they were in Afghanistan: Thank you for your service.

It was Dr. King who first raised that issue. They told him to be quiet and to know his place. But like Dr. King told one of his friends at the time, he might have been politically unwise, but he was being morally wise, and that is what mattered. This year, in 2018, we must be morally wise.

Dr. King’s life and legacy show us that doing right is rarely the same thing as doing what is easy. We, too, must persist.

As we head into a consequential year when Americans will go to the polls, let us not lose sight of the fact that to protect and preserve our democracy from voter suppression, cybersecurity weakness, and foreign meddling.

We must expand voting rights for all Americans.

We must modernize our voting systems.

We must appoint an independent commission to investigate foreign meddling into the electoral system before the 2018 Federal election.

We must break down barriers to voting, not build them.

We must make registering to vote easier, not harder.

We must ensure elections are competitive, not guaranteed.

We must restore the right to vote, for felons who have served their prison sentences.

We must end partisan gerrymandering.

We must protect the sanctity of our elections.

We must restore the Voting Rights Act. Dr. King knew that it was important.

As I go to my seat, I just want to thank my colleagues for their endurance. As “Amazing Grace” says: “I once was lost, but now am found.”

Serving with these great people in the United States Congress has saved a wretch like me.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, we had the gentleman from the East. Now we will go to the West, to someone whom I have known for 50 years, but the legacy of Dr. King, Dr. King and the women and men who came tonight to mark the 50th anniversary of the assassination of Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King. We have made progress in these past 50 years, but the legacy of the example of Dr. King show us that much remains to be done.

Although many marches and protests were met with violence, we had Dr. King and the women and men who stood with him, like our very own colleague and Congressional Black Caucus member, Congressman John Lewis.

As I listened to Congressman Lewis tonight—as I sit on this House floor and have the privilege and honor to serve with these colleagues and a friend—it reminded me of his courage and how much more work we have to do.

It was through these peaceful protests, it was through their courage, it was through the power of the messages that they sent that they stood up against the establishment.

Dr. King was able to bring the injustices felt by African Americans nationwide to the forefront of American politics.

His work culminated in the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, when hundreds of thousands of individuals of all stripes and communities came for a call to justice and equality for all.

Mr. Speaker, let me thank Congressman Evans for hosting tonight’s Special Order hour. I honor once again the great work of Dr. Martin Luther King. I thank my colleague, Congressman Dwight Evans, who hails from the Second District of Pennsylvania. I thank him for leading us tonight. I also thank Congressional Black Caucus Chairman Cedric Richmond for allowing us to come tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in coming to the floor tonight to mark the 50th anniversary of the assassination of Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King.

As I join my colleagues in coming to the floor tonight to mark the 50th anniversary of the assassination of Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, I want to thank all the individuals who made this happen.

We must modernize our voting systems.
It was on that day, August 28, 1963, when Dr. King gave one of his most powerful and famous speeches, that passionate speech, “I Have a Dream,” calling for the end of racism and the expansion of civil rights and economic rights.

I am so proud that Mother Beatty’s mother, my husband’s grandmother, was an invited platform guest to witness that speech. We have that picture in our office to remind us and to remind our children and grandchildren of the power of Dr. Martin Luther King and Congressman John Lewis.

With the emotions and the will of the march that it encapsulated in such powerful words, it rose to the top of the agenda of reformers and facilitated the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Still, Mr. Speaker, Dr. King’s work was not done.

The next year, Dr. King helped to lead the Selma to Montgomery march. How proud I am that I was able to participate in the reenactment of that on its 50th anniversary. The march route spanned some 54 miles, from Selma, Alabama, to the State capital in Montgomery.

The marchers were in response to the Southern States’ legislatures passing and maintaining discriminatory laws and practices over decades where it meant to deny, Mr. Speaker, African Americans across the State, across the South, the right to vote.

What is our message? What is our message tonight? We are here because we are still walking in it. We are still fighting for civil rights and voting rights and economic rights. We are still fighting for equal pay for equal work.

But we are not afraid. Mr. Lewis led us on this House floor in fighting for gun safety. We are not afraid because we are continuing the legacy of Martin Luther King.

Let me just say that we must break this cycle of economic inequality, racism, and poverty. We must stand up to the GOP and to President Trump, because when we look at this tax reform bill, it brings those injustices in demographics and equality, a financial gain.

So we are here tonight to say there is still a dream. There is still a stone of hope.

Again, I thank my colleague for leading us in this celebration and this tribute to Martin Luther King.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, thank my colleague for those eloquent words and those comments which were very succinct and provided a lot for us.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus for allowing me to have this opportunity to speak, and I yield back the balance of my time.
