

The Internet has a wealth of information regarding career information. Here is a list of Web sites to help you get started with your career exploration process:

CareerOneStop

CareerOneStop is a website sponsored by U.S. Department of Labor that provides resources to find training resources and job searches that match your interests.

Jobipedia

Jobipedia is a website where students and recent graduates can ask questions about job searching and get answers directly from experienced recruiting professionals at America's top employers. Topics include internships and training, job searching, resume writing, interviewing, salaries and benefits, workplace relations, and career planning.

Occupational Outlook Handbook

The Occupational Outlook Handbook is an excellent resource to gain career information. It will provide you with reports on many careers with accurate information from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

O\*NET (Occupational Information Network)

The O*NET is an up-to-date occupational database with descriptions and skill sets for specific occupations. O*NET information helps workers evaluate what skills are needed in their current occupations, how existing skills may transfer to other occupations and what new skills will be required to make the transition to a new occupation.

Salary.com

This site can provide you with occupational descriptions and salary information for careers. Salary information can be focused down to your specific zip code!

New Mexico Workforce Connection/Solutions

New Mexico's official online portal to virtual job matching services, employment resources, the Unemployment Insurance system, and much more.